ishes that in some respects closely resembled the half charred ribs of a humber of times and was only prevented from burning by the stalwart efforts of the Frost household, assisted by kindly neighbors who loaned excellent aid with buckets of water. It is estimated orders were accordingly issued not sembled the half charred ribs of a human being, at least so thought some of the members of the doctor's family, and orders were accordingly issued not to disturb them in any way. Notice of the gruesome find was given Dr. Louis I. Masen, medical examiner, that a person, supposed to be a tramp, had lost life by the burning of the barn.

Dr. Mason received the notice inter Thorsday avening and early Friday morning went to the site of the fire. After a ride with its attendant vicissitudes over the back hill country he arrived at the Frost summer home and was met by Mrs. Frost, who again told him of her belief that the bones were those of a human being. Dr. Mason went to the awesome spot and lindeed did find bones that were about the size of a person's ribs. To clinch her contention Mrs. Frost said that the bones occupied a spot about where the stairs of the barn were before the fire. Beginning to think that there was something to It, the doctor leaned over and picking up one of the supposed bones found that it was nothing more nor less than a pertion of a rubber hose
